

Jews in Boro, Nation To Observe New Year

Celebration of Rosh ha-Shanah Planned
By Synagogues, Hospitals, Homes, Army Posts

The sick, the orphaned, the servicemen in army posts and even the deaf mutes of the Jewish faith in Brooklyn and Long Island tomorrow evening will celebrate Rosh Hashanah, marking the Jewish New Year 5702, under extensive plans made by various local organizations and institutions, along with co-religionists throughout the nation.

President Roosevelt in a holiday message to the Jews of America foresaw an end to the "temporary darkness" encompassing the world and urged the celebrants to retain hope. A greeting from Governor Lehman called for complete national unity.

In addition to regular synagogue services, arrangements have been made by hospitals, homes and welfare agencies affiliated with the New York and Brooklyn Federation of Jewish Charities to observe the holiday. Similar plans have been made for Yom Kippur, Day of Atonement, most solemn of all Jewish holidays, on Oct. 1 and 2.

The Jewish Hospital of Brooklyn will hold ceremonies for patients and staff members in its newly decorated chapel, with Rabbi Leon S. Essex conducting.

Holiday observances at Beth Moses Hospital will be conducted in the ward for patients able to sit up.

The Hebrew Society for the Jewish deaf will conduct services in sign language under the auspices of the Young Israel Synagogue of Brownsville at the Hebrew Educational Society, Hopkinson and Sutter Aves. Rabbi Alter F. Landesman, a director of the society, will officiate and Mrs. Bella Blumenthal will interpret. There will be special services for children.

The 1,852 children accommodated in foster homes under the supervision of the Brooklyn Hebrew Orphan Asylum will attend services with their foster parents at temples and synagogues.

Youngsters at the Pride of Judea Children's Home will conduct services in the orphanage's synagogue at Dumont Ave. and Elton St.

Patients of the Jewish Sanitarium and Hospital for Chronic Diseases who are able to be moved will assemble in the institution's main auditorium and synagogue, Rutland Road and E. 49th St.

Y.M.H.A.'s and other community centers throughout Brooklyn and Long Island have made special provisions for men on leave from the various branches of the armed service to attend services.

At the Navy Yard, Rabbi Joshua Goldberg of Astoria will conduct services aboard the U. S. S. Prairie State and at the Naval Hospital.

Men stationed at Fort Tilden,

Rockaway; the New York Naval Air Base at former Floyd Bennett Field, and the Port of Embarkation will attend services in neighboring communities, where many families have volunteered to play host to those who cannot return to their own homes for the holiday period.

More than 600 at Camp Upton, L. I., will take part in services in the post's War Department Theater. Chaplain Nathan E. Barasch will conduct the ceremonies, after which the men will be dinner guests of the Jewish Welfare Board.

The Jewish Board of Guardians has provided New Year's cards and prayer books for Jewish prisoners in city and State institutions and arranged for special services. In some cases, the board has provided transportation for relatives to visit prisoners during the holidays.

Ceiling Urged On War Profits

mining costs, should be limited to 6 percent.

"We're making more war millionaires than we did the last time," he said.

"The exorbitant profits reaped by defense industries have had more to do with fomenting labor unrest than any other single factor."

Predict Building Curtailment

Defense officials predicted a sharp curtailment of ordinary residential building today as a result of the decision of the Office of Production Management to give privately financed defense housing first call on material.

Under the new program, to be administered by Priorities Director Donald M. Nelson, builders of privately-financed homes for defense workers in specified defense areas will be able to apply for priority ratings to insure delivery of scarce building materials. These include structural steel, iron, nails, bolts, electrical fixtures, heating and refrigerating equipment and pipes.

"The effect of the priorities system in this case will be to give defense housing a mortgage on available materials," an official explained.
